

ARE YOU CURRENTLY EMPLOYED?

Did you know that you can use your job (as an internship) to earn academic credit? Work-Based Learning (WBL) is an academic class that is included in the major elective requirements of most programs of study here at Rowan-Cabarrus Community College.

Benefits of using your job as an internship:

1

It's a simple way to earn academic credit without the time commitment.

2

You can replace major elective credit(s) to get a head-start on completing the requirements of your program of study.

3

You can further your career by showing initiative and defining exciting and new duties with your employer.

Getting started is a simple process.

Speak with a WBL Internship Developer and complete a Work-Based Learning Application and a Current Employment Form. An internship developer can provide you with the required documentation or you can access the forms on the Rowan-Cabarrus Work-Based Learning website under the “forms” section, www.rccc.edu/workbasedlearning.
